THE CITY

Visit Denver

In the wake of the California Gold Rush, prospectors hoped to strike their own reserve of wealth and riches in the streams of the Rocky Mountains and the South Platte River. Today citizens of Denver have riches worth far more than precious metal. They have a prosperous city inlaid in horizons of prairie fields and the mighty Rockies mountainside.

As a part of America's pioneering history, Denver is riddled with historical elements. The Colorado Railroad Museum showcases the city's tenacity in constructing an entirely citizen-built rail system, which connected Denver to the transcontinental railroad. Remnants of the Wild West can be found in areas like the Buffalo Bill Museum and Grave, allowing visitors to step into the Old Western lifestyle. Other landmarks of esteem include the world's largest single producer of coins, the Denver Mint.

Laden with parks, trails, gardens, museums, and districts, Denver is a tributary of its citizens. Taking an active interest and pride in their city's evolution, Denverites even approved a sales tax in 1988 that would go to maintaining Denver's cultural and scientific facilities—a tax still implemented today. Don't be fooled, though, for the city knows how to relax and show its citizens and visitors a good time. This is evidenced by Denver being the largest brewer of beer in the country.

Mercantile Dining and Provision

Mercantile Dining and Provision is the culmination of Chef Alex Seidel's two previous ventures, Fruition Restaurant and Fruition

Farms. In 2009, driven by a desire to learn more about food sourcing and production, Chef Seidel partnered with then-Sous Chef at Fruition Restaurant, Jimmy Warren, to purchase a 10-acre farm outside of Denver. Shortly thereafter, Fruition Farms officially opened, becoming Colorado's first artisanal sheep's milk creamery.

Mercantile dining & provision represents the next evolution in Chef Seidel's philosophy on approachability and transparency in dining. Beyond the seasonally-inspired fare served in a casual atmosphere and the marketplace offering artisanal goods, many of which are used in the restaurant, Mercantile helps bridge the information gap between farmer and consumer. In connecting the dots, we want to instill in our guests the appreciation we have for how much effort went into producing each meal and how many hands were involved each step along the way. We hope this inspires our guests to go home and recreate for themselves some of the things they tasted in the restaurant.
