Washington's mountains rise from the ground like the mighty, mythical gods of lore. Stretching upwards with little regard for the communities of people peppered around them, such grand indifference captures our imaginations and awe. We strive to scale and conquer them, to master their trails and hills, and their magnificence allows us to transcend who we are in some magical way. Grand Mound, Washington places you within reach of the state's majestic mountains, and thus its main attractions.

THE AREA

Christopher Boswell / Shutterstock.com

Grand Mound, Washington was founded in 1851 by Jotham Weeks Judson, the father of future pioneer and author Phoebe Judson. As a census-designated place (CDP) in Thurston County, Grand Mound possesses a settled population that is not legally incorporated as a town or city under Washington state laws. CDPs include small rural communities, which precisely describes Grand Mound with a population scratching 3,000.

While the community itself does not necessarily have any attractions, towns like Centralia are within close vicinity. But the real star is Washington State's natural beauty, which is well within driving distance and includes such historic places as Mount St. Helens, Mount Rainier National Park and the Pacific beaches.

DO & SEE

Galyna Andrushko / Shutterstock.com

Part of Grand Mound's attraction is its vicinity to Washington's fabulous national parks and mountainsides. It is well worth the drive to see the stunning views of the mountains and beaches, and adventurers will be well rewarded by taking to the hiking trails and plentiful outdoor activities. For even more options, seek nearby towns such as Centralia.

Mount Rainier National Park

Mount Rainier is an easy drive from Grand Mound to Ashford. Just an hour and a half away, the National Park is a must-see. With the warmer weather, myriad opportunities bloom for fun at the Park. Enjoy hiking, National Park camping, National Forest camping, fishing, horseback riding, mountain biking, mountaineering, road biking, trail running, and driving tours. The Driving Tours allow visitors to circle Rainier, explore scenic byways and take lots of pictures. During the cooler seasons, enjoy cross country skiing, snowmobiling, the Snowplay Area, snowshoeing, winter camping and snowboarding.

Johnston Ridge Observatory

Nearly an hour from Grand Mound, in the heart of Mount St.

Helens' blast zone, lies the Johnston Ridge Observatory. Erected with the purpose of hosting displays that explore the biological and geological implications of the 1980 eruption, JRO features award-winning films, ranger talks, landscape observations, and lunch for guests. You are even permitted to hike the surrounding areas. During the summers, JRO holds the annual Music on the Mountain series in its outdoor amphitheater. JRO closes for the winter season but opens in May.
