The Castle of San José

Fortress of the XI century, it was built by muslims. It is located on top of a rock in the higher part of the area of the town. During the Middle and Modern ages, the castle was very important due to its strategic situation. The 1644 and 1748 earthquakes and the bomb attack in 1708 in the Succession War were responsible for its destruction.

Municipal Museum Orduña House

The “Grand House” of El Castell de Guadalest or “Casa Orduña” was built after the great earthquake of 1644, which devastated the region and demolished the buttress of the castle. It was built by the Orduñas, a family of Basque lineage. They came to the kingdom of Valencia with the Infante Fortuna de Navarra; they later went into the service of the Cardonas, admirals of Aragón. D. Sancho de Cardona received the title of Marques of Guadalest in 1543. As the family enjoyed the complete confidence of the marquesses, they were sent to Guadalest and served as guardians of the fortress and governors of the estate for almost three hundred years.

Our Lady of the Assumption Church

XVIII century construction from the Baroque period, ascribed to José Sierra. The church is situated in the old part of the town, just beside the Nobel house of the Orduña's. This construction was built between 1740 and 1753 over the plot of land where the primitive temple used to be and dates from the Christian Conquest (XIII century). The church was burnt and plundered during the Civil War and was again changed in 1962, shortening its length and changing the ground floor, this led to the loss of the cupola and the transept.

Between 1995 and 1996 we undertook the task of renovation and interior decoration in order to save the present day building.

Ethnological Museum or typical house from the XVIII century

The museum was created to raise awareness of the lifestyle and work of our ancestors in the Vall de Guadalest. The museum is set in a typical eighteenth century house of El Castell de Guadalest, built on the rock. The town was a stronghold of Arab origin, and you get to it through a tunnel dug into the rock, the door of which is still preserved.

The museum has information panels (in the main European languages) and brochures which are given to visitors.

Orduña house

The Casa Orduña was built after the great earthquake of 1644 that devastated the area and ruined many of the castle's rooms. It was built by Orduña family, strain of Basque origin who had come to El Castell de Guadalest as confidants of Cardona, Admirals of Aragon. D. Sancho de Cardona received the title of Marquis of Guadalest in 1542. The Orduña family were in the service of the Marquis wardens of the fortress and governors of their states. The house was burned and looted during the Spanish War of Succession (1708). In 1756, D. Pedro Antonio Garcia Buenaventura de Orduña entered the Military Order of Santiago thereby achieving access the noble estate.

Cases Noves

The personal touch. Toni and Sofia run this rural accommodation in the Vall de Guadalest, located inland from the busiest beaches. The couple bend over backwards to make their house a modest but charming place. A place where people can find adventure activities. Some people will go to the ravines, others will find the most inaccessible rocks with their climbing equipment, others will prefer mountain biking, horseback riding, or simply take to the mountains on foot.

You can sit by the fireplace in the living room, have tea in the reading room and dinner in the dining room.

You can also enjoy the terrace from where you have views of Aitana mountain, the bay of Altea, Bernia mountain, Guadalest Valley and the castle.

On Saturday night, there is a special dinner (up to 10 picaetes). All kind of snacks from the Valencian Community.
