Dutch heritage is present in the town's dairy farms, blueberry and strawberry fields, parks, museums, and its architecture. What makes Lynden such an attractive destination is also the alluring proximity to other points of interest, including Canada five miles north, county seat Bellingham 15 miles away, and half-an-hour's drive from the Pacific Ocean. Skiers may be happy to know that the popular Mount Baker is only an hour away as well.

THE CITY

Laurens Hoddenbagh/Shutterstock.com

Lynden is approximately five miles (8.0 km) south of the U.S.-Canadian border and home to the Northwest Washington Fair. The second largest city in Whatcom County, Lynden was named and established in 1874 on the site of the Nooksack Indian village Squahalish by Holden and Phoebe Judson.

Phoebe Judson's influence over the town is so substantial that she is locally known as the "Mother of Lynden". She is credited with providing Lynden with its name, taken from the poem "Hohenlinden" by Scottish poet Thomas Campbell. Judson also founded the Northwest Normal School, which became and is now known as Western Washington University.

Judson lived until 1926 and so saw the cultural infusion of Dutch and Scandinavian immigrants who came to Lynden from the late 1890s through mid 1900s. This heritage can be seen in the Dutch-style buildings along Front street, some of which house eateries and bakeries serving traditional Dutch cuisine and pastries.

Most importantly, the heritage of these early inhabitants of Lynden show through in the day-to-day lives of its modern ones. It is a town, nestled among the beautiful natural surroundings of northwestern Washington state, where faith, family, and community are paramount.

Best Time to Visit

Located in the uppermost western part of the USA, Lynden is characterized by a combination of oceanic humidity, strong wind and relatively high latitude that makes temperatures quite cold from October to March. Winter is also the season when precipitation reaches its peak, and the lowest temperatures keep many tourist from visiting this region. Late Spring might be a good option for those looking for mild sunny days and low hotel prices. Anyway, the best period to enjoy Lynden is definitely Summer: besides the pleasure of open-air activities, the third week of July is the time for The Raspberry Festival, which features basketball tournaments, the Razz & Shine Car Show, The Raspberry Fun Run, tours of raspberry fields and wineries.
