Speaking of Parma, the first things that come to mind are probably ham and Parmesan cheese. Indeed, Parma is one of the most important culinary centres of Italy, but this city is so much more than that. Parma was the capital of a very powerful duchy, which left a legacy of stunning monuments and palaces. In addition, the splendour of that period created fertile grounds for the flourishing of art. In fact, Parma became one of the main centres for opera, thanks to its amazing theatres and its fine citizen Giuseppe Verdi.

DINING

Jack Frog/Shutterstock.com

Parmesan cuisine is full of variety. First and foremost, the city has given its name to several prized dairy and meat products, the highlights of which are undeniably Parmigiano Reggiano (Parmesan cheese) and Parma ham. As in the rest of Italy, meals are accompanied by local high-quality wines such as the reds Colli di Parma and Lambrusco, or the whites Sauvignon and Malvasia.

The real autochthonous queens of the kitchen are the so-called "rezdore", all the grandmothers and mothers who are capable to make real Parmesan dishes according to the tradition. But if you don't know anyone from here, you can taste local specialties in the numerous restaurants, agritourisms and trattorias scattered all around the city and in the neighborhoods.

Parizzi

Parizzi is one of the most refined restaurants of the city, offering both classic and innovative dishes. Specialties of the house include homemade pasta and fresh beef tartare. But if you have no budget limits and you want to live a very unique experience, you can book the chef table, or rather, an exclusive dinner with the chef in person at your table preparing your meal right under your eyes.

CAFES

al1962/Shutterstock.com

During your tour around the city, in-between all the amazing sights, you deserve to sit back, relax and enjoy a nice cup of coffee accompanied by a delicious Italian pastry. One cake not to be missed is the Duchessa di Parma (Parma duchess), a rich cake with zabaglione and chocolate ganache dedicated to Maria Luigia Duchess (Napoleon's wife). Parma, like any other city in Italy, has several historic cafes and ice cream parlours, but also modern and lively bars where to enjoy nice aperitifs before to start your Parmesan night. Start exploring Parma's strong cafe culture and try a typical Italian espresso.

Pasticceria Cocconi

Serving traditional pastries since 1951, Cocconi is a cosy cafe where you can enjoy delicious continental breakfasts, with croissants and other desserts. You can also visit during teatime, have a break in its intimate tea-room, or for aperitif-time and taste its appetizing finger food.

SHOPPING

pio3/Shutterstock.com

Italian fashion and food should be the key themes for Parma's visitors. The city centre is full of fashion boutiques (the most important shopping streets are: via Garibaldi, Strada della Repubblica, via Cavour, via Mazzini and via Massimo D'Azeglio) where you can buy clothes, leather goods and stylish shoes.

For food there are many shops where you can find not only Parma ham and Parmesan cheese, but also an impressive variety of salted pork meats (try culatello and Felino salami), pastas and wines.

In many pastry shops, you can pick up the typical Parma cake called the Duchessa Maria Luigia and sweeties called violette di Parma (violets of Parma). Violetta di Parma is also the name of the essence made in honour of the Duchess Maria Luigia. Lastly, Parma has also a district of antiques shops and art galleries, which are located along Strada Farini, via XXII luglio and Strada della Repubblica.

Fidenza Village

Located at only 30 minutes' drive away from the centre of Parma, Fidenza Village is a shopping complex where savvy shoppers can delight in discounted clothes, shoes, bags and accessories from the most famous designers past collections.
