THE ISLAND

Seb c'est bien/Shutterstock.com

As hard as it may be to wrap one's head around, Reunion Island, located just east of Madagascar in the Indian Ocean, remains an administrative region of France, and as such constitutes a part of the European Union and the Eurozone (albeit its most remote part). Speaking the island's official language - French - may prove handy when traveling around, but many locals do speak some English as well (Reunion Creole is used in most day-to-day communication).

The Island was first settled over 300 years ago by natives of France, Africa and Madagascar. New pieces have been added to eclectic mosaic of ethnicities and cultures that is Reunion, all put together to create an inviting combination of elegant French and flavourful Creole cuisine, serene beaches and steep mountain ranges (harbouring the still active Piton de la Fournaise volcano), stylish shopping streets reminiscent of those in mainland France and busy local markets. Trips to Reunion are best-planned well in advance - unlike its immediate resort neighbour of Mauritius, the island does not boast a plethora accommodation options, so these are advised to be booked in advance.

DO & SEE

Joost van Uffelen/Shutterstock.com

With its abundance of natural beauty, Reunion is an island where any traveller is spoilt for choice. Do keep in mind that most locations up in the mountains are best visited before noon, since view-obstructing clouds tend to thicken at higher elevations as the day progresses. Dress in layers - the heat in waterside valleys below is misleading, and quickly turns to chilly winds up on the hilltops.

Piton de Fournaise

Get your hiking shoes on and plan a day trip up the magnificent Piton de Fournaise volcano - one of the most active peaks in the world. Joining a guided tour is highly recommended, and do wear appropriate clothing, as temperatures tend to fall dramatically the higher up you go.

Address: Piton de Fournaise, Reunion

Le Maido

The island's north holds one of its most scenic spots at the le Maido summit, where stunning views over Reunion's west coast unfold before the eyes of enthralled visitors. To avoid madding crowds and possible weather changes, head to the summit early in the morning on a clear day.

Address: Route de Maido, Reunion

Domaine du Café Grillé

A fascinating adventure through the island's past via the over 900 plant species contained in this well-maintained botanical garden awaits visitors to the domaine du Café Grillé, where the journey starts at a recognizable modern creole garden and ends at a lush forest containing indigenous plants.

Cirque de Mafate

The stunning, secluded caldera of Mafate is the place several tiny villages call home. Reaching the dazzling remote loaction is certainly worth the hike (no paved roads run up here, and hiking for hours is unavoidable). Depart in the early morning hours from the Maido or Cilaos (for an easier hike).

Address: Mafate, Reunion

Jardin des Parfums et des Epices

Tropical flower fragrances fill the air already in the garden's parking lot, and the abundance of flower species becomes apparent once visitors set foot into the lush gardens. Marvel at and learn all about the indigenous plants, flowers, and spices (learning is currently only possible in French).

Waterfalls

Visiting the beautiful natural waterfalls is a must-do for visitors to the island. Some of the most scenic ones include those at the bassin des Aigrettes (at Saint-Gilles-Les-Bains), the cascade de Bras Rouge in Cialos, Delices in Sainte-Suzanne, and Takamaka in Saint Benoit.

Beaches & Lagoons

Being an island in the Indian Ocean, Reunion naturally boasts a number of splendid beaches, some of the best being concentrated in the waterside stretch between the settlements of Saint-Gilles and l'Ermitage-Les-Bains - these beaches here are sheltered from strong waves by near-lying coral reefs. One of the prettiest white sand beaches on the island is the l'Hermitage, lined with trees to provide saving shade. The prettiest lagoons are to be found between St. Paul and Saint-Leu.

Saint-Denis

The region's capital Saint-Denis in the island's north is worth a visit, even if only for a glimpse of Reunion's urban side.

Being the administrative center of the island, it is home to a significant number of local museums, monuments, and important sights.

Aquarium de la Reunion

The fascinating 600,000 liter aquarium of Reunion contains an impressive 500 species of fish and marine animals.

Descriptions are provided in French only, but the aquarium is still worth a visit if only for the sight of underwater creatures. Workshops and information meetings are held regularly.

DINING

Foodpictures/Shutterstock.com

A Reunion Island staple are the traditional Creole "caris" (essentially a local spelling of "curry"), the "cabri massalé" (prepared with goat meat) being one of the most popular varieties. Caris are also made with chicken, duck, and seafood, all normally come with a separate side of minced chili pepper. Some local restaurants offer buffet-style Creole dining, with a selection of caris and stews, as well as other local dishes (e.g. vanilla duck, smoked pork or rougail sausage). Indian, Chinese, and French influences can all be traced in the local flavours, and a few fine dining French restaurants operate on the island as well (primarily in the capital city of Saint-Denis).

Ferme Auberge Eva Annibal (Bras-Panon)

Speaking of authentic, the locally famed restaurant at Eva Annibal's is a longstanding establishment, a place to be written into a savvy travelers' itinerary. Order the full meal featuring some of the local homely classics (such as the vanilla duck), and follow-up with one of the many rums on offer.

Au Bout La Bas (Saint-Leu)

The superb St-Leu restaurant serves cooked to perfection local meat and seafood, but the real highlight here are the so-called "tartines" - succulent open-faced sandwiches that come with various toppings. Portions are very generous, and desserts simply not to be missed.

Address: 37 Rue du Lagon, Saint-Leu

Opening hours: Tue-Sat 12pm-2.30pm & 7pm-10pm

Phone: +262 262559872

Le Blue Margouillat (Saint-Leu)

A restaurant holding somewhat of a legendary status on the island, the Blue Margouillat (housed inside a boutique hotel by the same name) is a very upscale dining establishment serving elevated dishes by the pool, against a backdrop of the traditional Creole building it is contained in.

CAFES

Irina Meliukh/Shutterstock.com

Reunionnais French heritage shines through in its array of bakeries and pastry shops, heavily reminiscent of those dotting each and every larger town on the mainland. These ties to France make it possible to savour a fresh croissant here, in the middle of the Indian Ocean, or go for some of the treats unique to the region - a sweet "macatia" bun or savoury "gâteau patate," a cake made with potato or corn. Fruit is, naturally, abundant - do not miss the goyaviers (small red strawberry guavas), ubiquitous lychee and mango, as well as passion fruit, pitaya cactus and delightfully sweet soursop (all often come in juice and sorbet form).

Le Massale (Saint-Denis)

The small and very casual take-out cafe is where locals in-the-know go for delicious Indian treats and snacks - from samosas and other deep-fried savoury pastries with various fillings to colorful "barfi" sweets that come in a variety of fruity flavours.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Monkey Business Images/Shutterstock.com

Reunion Island's west coast is the area most frequented by party-goers - the general stretch between Saint-Paul in the north and Saint-Pierre in the south is where most bars and nightlife establishments are concentrated, with Saint-Gilles and the paradise beach of L'Hermitage particularly known for their animated, glossy venues, while Saint-Pierre still retains some of the authentic local charm. Drinks to be had on the island are the locally-produced rums and the island "Burbon" beer brand, simply referred to as "dodo" by locals.

Ô Bar Reunion (Saint-Denis)

Contrary to what the establishment's name indicates, the Ô Bar isn't just a watering hole but a full-blown restaurant, with a rather varied selection of meals and tapas. The drink list is, naturally, quite extensive. Live music nights are hoisted frequently.

Roland Garros Airport

This one is the island's main entry point, servicing a number of international destinations and airlines. The airport is located in the immediate vicinity of the capital city of Saint-Denis.

The "Citalis" bus line 31 functions as the airport shuttle and allows travelers to reach the city easily.

There are two long-distance bus routes by "Car Jaune": "ZE" bus connects Saint-Benoît and Saint-Denis (Mon-Sat, 3 times a day), while the "T" route runs from Roland Garros to Pierrefonds airport in Saint-Pierre via multiple destinations on the west coast (every two hours).

Taxis and rental cars are available for hire.

Public Transport

A network of yellow buses ("Car Jeunes") connects all major destinations on the island. There are 13 lines in total, one of the most popular ones being line "T" that runs through many beach resorts along Reunions west coast, from Roland Garros Airport in the north to Pierrefonds Airport in the south. Consult the website for schedules and fares.

Taxi

Taxis are fairly expensive, and prices go up even higher at night time (after 8pm) - these are easily hired in town centers or at bus stations. Taxis can be shared, in which case prepare to wait for passengers headed in the same direction.
